

DALL SHEEP MOUNTAIN CARIBOU

in the N.W.T. and YUKON

On a late season hunt in the Yukon,

Ken Wilson and Joel Wilkinson each shoot record book mountain caribou north of Watson Lake with Ceaser Lake Outfitters. Living in a trapper's cabin and accessing the mountains by snowmobiles, outfitter Terry Wilkinson and guide Joel Wilkinson use spotting scopes to score bulls at long distance before closing the gap, first by machine and then by foot, so Wilson, their last client of the season, can shoot an excellent bull. With time still remaining in the season, Wilson's guide, Joel, has time to look over several good bulls before shooting a heavy-horned one.

Then, on an early season hunt in the Northwest Territories with N.W.T. Outfitters, all of the spectacular footage from Sportsmen on Film's highly regarded Hunting Dall Sheep and Caribou in the N.W.T. is shown. First, Bob Hartman and his guide, Jeremiah, wait for several groups of Dall sheep to bed down before crawling into shooting position in a long, continuous sequence that shows an 11 year old ram hit three times before rolling down a shale mountain-side into a drainage.

Finally, Pete Etchehoury follows his guide, Doc, into the middle of a group of five mountain caribou bulls and shoots the biggest one on-camera. You'll feel like you're a part of this spectacular hunting adventure in the remote, but beautiful, Yukon and N.W.T.
